MISSILES LAUNCHERS

A missile as defined here is a self-propelled and guided munition, usually by an internal target acquisition system and more rarely remotely. These portable high-tech weapons appeared in the 2000s, when the miniaturization of the target detection and piloting organs became really appreciable.
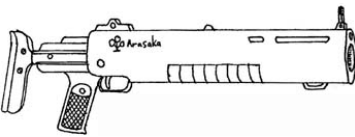

Modern portable missiles are naturally intended for use in armored vehicles, but lighter versions are used as anti-personnel or anti-cyborg weapons.

| A dual purpose missile launcher from Arasaka. For anti-tank purposes the fired missile is wire guided to target, but for anti-aircraft purposes the weapon introduces an entirely new device. Its called the VITA system, the missile itself has a small camera mounted to it, which transmits the video back to the weapon's eyepiece. The weapon controls the missile by remote though controls added to the weapons grips. What it all boils down to is that if you can play a simple video game you can hit your target. The computer, receiver, and other electronics for this system are stored in a small box about the size of a gas can, and are jacked into the weapon prior to it being fired. | |

Dai Lung is again moving into a dangerous area with its Horde micro-missile launcher. The weapon is quickly losing favor among the Chinese troops it is issued to for its extreme inaccuracy and tendency to malfunction. Unfortunately, the weapons only real innovation, its rotating 4 barrel system, designed to prevent overheating from the missile exhaust, is the primary source of the weapons malfunctions. Most commonly the barrel will under, or over rotate and lock up, preventing the weapon from firing. When this happens the weapon must be disassembled, as due to a flaw in design the electrical system has a tendency to short out easily.
